Project 3 Proposal

My plan for project 3 is to make some sort of either video or podcast that is like a news report explaining how dystopian fiction is sweeping the nation as an important young adult genre. I haven't decided between an audio vs video file because while an audio is probably easier, I am better with Imovie than I am with Garage Band. I'd love to use the podcast tool we saw on our tour at North Campus. I will probably need to learn what a podcast exactly is before I try to make one.

Learning to use whatever software I need to physically create the project will probably be the hardest part of the process. It will take a lot of time, especially if it involves filming, so I'll have to manage my time carefully and start really soon so that I have time to flesh out my idea more. I honestly can't give you much more information because I don't know what I want to or am capable of doing yet and I don't really want to make it up just to have something to hand in right now. I am more of a figure it out as I do it kind of person. I will probably try to make the audience more towards an older crowd, perhaps the parents of teens who read dystopian fiction, or the people who market dystopian stories.

Given the article format of my project two, keeping with a reporter like style makes the most sense. Writing a song would be a natural inclination of mine just because I find it fun but it wouldn't have an argument persay and it would be difficult to fulfill the content requirements of the project.
